

Change of Governments

By Calvin

You're probably thinking "Yay! A democracy is the best form of government," but if you knew the truth you would change your mind in the blink of an eye. Two different parties are unsuccessful. Congress and the people are really messing up America. You never see England with the same problem as the USA. That's because they have a monarchy. Of course we should be like England and be a monarchy. Our country is a large machine that is missing many parts.

Many people believe that two different parties open up new ideas, but the only ideas include arguing with each other. If the two parties (Republicans and Democrats) didn't fight with each other, our country would get more done in less time. One party would make congress meetings less complicated. Although only one party would be used, we could make that party be a mix of Democrats and Republicans. Our government was meant to be an arguing government. Here is a simple equation, 1 party+1 party=1 big mess.

Congress and the people are not helping our government. Sure, Congress does help, but not that much. When something goes wrong in the USA, we blame the president. The president only accepts and vetoes the bills that the people and Congress make. If we are to blame anyone it should be congress and ourselves. Congress shut down the government over the national debt, and then postponed it to another date. People may think that Congress is great and that they saved us, but in my opinion, Congress is just buying more time to slack of work, and then they are going to wait till the last minute to fix it. Congress and the people are the real problem.

If we decide to ditch a democracy, we will need an alternative government. A monarchy is the best form of government. With a monarchy the new leader is usually the king, queen, or emperor's heir. If the person in power does not have an heir, a steward is chosen. Having someone inherit the throne saves a long, hard, brutal campaign. A monarchy is clearly the best choice.

The United States government is not a good choice. The two parties are like oil and water. Congress is just a bunch of bickering people. Monarchies are the only true, good governments. The USA should really reconsider a new government.
