

Good Grades

By Emma G

Have you ever wondered why kids are falling behind in school? If you think we will improve by just telling us that we did a good job, or saying “nice work” on a paper that says 100% or, A+, you are wrong. Students need more than just words that mean nothing after five minutes. If you want us to be happy and motivated about working hard and to progress in school then introduce this incredible idea to your school committee. With this idea of money you could feel noticed, feel content, and pay the price.

Feeling noticed is one of the best feelings in the world. So if you make someone feel noticed and appreciated by giving them money for their good grade, it will make their day especially if they haven't had a good grade in a long time. Wouldn't you want to feel noticed for something great?

If someone is always getting high scores or good grades more than two times, they don't feel as rewarded about good grades as they did before. If you do give them something like money for an A+ they would get real excited to get high scores next time it would make them extremely happy and delighted.

If you think students should just keep getting bad grades with no punishment you are crazy! Students need to learn to do better in class by something horrible, which is paying money. This would make students work harder and pay attention more in class. It would make them study more, too. At the end of the day kids will never be sad, they will be encouraged to do better.

So do you think feeling noticed, being satisfied, getting what you deserve, are all necessary things to get kids motivated and happy about their grades? Maybe the next time you see someone sad about a grade, you'll know the plan that could make them feel satisfied. That is why you should consider giving money to students with good grades.
