Roller-coasters are the most addicting ride in the park, because of the feeling of flight and the wind in your face. Roller-coasters with a lift hill are your best choice to ride if you're going on your first roller-coaster. There isn't a single roller-coaster in the world without a line, because they're so addicting to ride. Once you go on one, junior flat rides will be out of your mental to-do list. Everyone who goes on one gets addicted to them. Not convinced? Read on for more.

You may often hear that roller-coasters are the best ride in the park, because they are. Wood has an addicting factor since it's a classic ride made in the 1900's. Steel has an addicting factor like wood, because with the inversions, height and the drop make them so addicting. Water roller-coasters are addicting because of the drop and splash into the water. Suspended roller-coasters are addicting because of the first exhilarating drop with your feet dangling beneath you instead of being on the floor of a coaster car. Roller-coasters are by far the most addicting ride in the park.

Roller-coasters are one of the safest rides in the park. You're more likely to die in a bathtub than on a roller-coaster. Before the train's allowed to leave the station, the operators have to check every restraint to make sure it's safe. If there is an accident, which is very unlikely, the coaster is closed permanently and eventually removed from the park.

So if you haven't been on one, go to an amusement park and get on a roller-coaster and experience the feel of the wind in your face and feel of flight for yourself. Remember to check if it's a launch or lift, steel, suspended water or wood roller-coaster and remember the name of it so you can recommend it to a friend. Remember to tell them how safe they are. A ride on a roller-coaster won't leave you disappointed. So why waste a day at an amusement park on flat rides? Get on a roller-coaster and spend that day right!
